HOYA Corporation Announces Joining the Japan Climate Leaders Partnership (JCLP)

Tokyo – [September 5, 2022] – HOYA Corporation (HOYA) announces its joining the Japan Climate Leaders Partnership (JCLP), a group of companies committed to realizing a sustainable decarbonized society, as a supporting member.

To ensure we protect the environment for our next generations, HOYA has been actively engaged in environmental conservation activities as part of its commitment towards sustainability.

In September 2021, HOYA has identified greenhouse gas emissions as one of our key material issues under our sustainability framework and will be implementing plans to reduce this over time.

In addition to the introduction of energy-efficient production equipment and energy-saving activities, we will continue to switch to electricity derived from renewable energy sources and actively work toward the realization of a sustainable decarbonized society.

What is Japan Climate Leader's Partnership?

Japan Climate Leader's Partnership was established in 2009 as a unique Japanese corporate group, recognizing that the industry must have a healthy sense of urgency and begin to act proactively to realize a decarbonized society.

As of August 2022, 217 companies from a broad range of industries, including some of Japan's leading companies, are members. Total sales of the member companies amount to approximately 127 trillion yen, and total electricity consumption is approximately 63Twh (reference and approximate values including overseas).

For the realization of a decarbonized society, they have been promoting collaboration with local governments and overseas organizations, such as by concluding a comprehensive partnership agreement with Yokohama City and serving as a local partner of The Climate Group, an international non-profit organization, as a contact point for the promotion of RE100, EV100 and EP100.
